taneous mass text capability is not a component of (Guam's) telecommunication companies at this time."

During the October test, Blas explained, the message went out in batches, some customers received it within minutes, but others didn't get the message until hours later.

"So it wasn't an instantaneous message," she said.

Blas said emergency agencies are continuing to work with Guam's telecoms to create a system that allows for the instantaneous dispatch of a "one-to-many ... cell broadcast or wireless emergency alert," but they're not there yet.

"A viable solution requires funding from both GHS/OCD, as well as the local telecommunication companies," said Blas, and they are working on finding that funding.

Guam's own false alarm

Although the kind of mass-text mishap that occurred in Hawaii is not yet possible here, Guam did have its own false alarm incident last year.

An employee at KSTO triggered the emergency broadcast system shortly after midnight on Aug. 15. A warning went out to radio and TV stations declaring "a civil danger" for Guam.

The message went out at the height of threats by North Korea to fire a missile at Guam and it coincided with an outage that knocked out power to several villages.

Blas said that incident was "internal to KSTO" and caused by "human error."

GHS/OCD has worked closely with KTSO, said Blas, "to ensure all standards are up to par with the Emergency Alert System, including direct contact with the station manager, site visits as needed and awareness of the station procedures as it relates to the Emergency Alert System."

KSTO is still the primary licensed station authorized to conduct tests and send out emergency broadcasts on Guam using the Emergency Alert System; however, Blas said Guam Homeland Security has "a pending application with the Federal Emergency Management Agency to become an alerting authority." If approved, that would mean GHS/OCD would be able to "send out emergency alerts over multiple interfaces to include television and radio."

Authorizing an emergency alert

GHS/OCD currently has a 24-hour watch desk that is manned by no less than two people at all times, and "there are checks and balances in place to ensure each is performing their duties," Blas said.

The watch desk is the first to vet any emergency notification or phone call they receive, Blas said, and the Homeland Security adviser or the Office of Civil Defense administrator must approve any message before it goes out. Emergency messages are pre-scripted, approved messages that are prepared beforehand for time management, she said.

If an emergency message is approved, the watch desk has the capability of activating the All Hazards Alert Warning System sirens. Watch desk officers can also activate the Emergency Alert System by contacting KSTO directly.

It is Blas' responsibility to issue emergency notifications using mass email, social media and local media.

Court documents list six separate alleged incidents after the initial sexual contact in which Garrido allegedly sexually penetrated the victim with his finger, performed other sexual acts and showed the victim pornographic material.

The defendant was interviewed by police, during which he allegedly admitted to several instances of criminal sexual conduct, court documents state.

Both charges of criminal sexual conduct are first-degree felonies.

Lawmakers trade blame for shutdown

WASHINGTON (The Washington Post) - Congressional leaders in both parties refused to budge publicly from their political corners Saturday on the first day of the government shutdown, avoiding direct negotiations and bitterly blaming each other for the impasse in speeches. President Trump joined the fray with a series of charged tweets.

But private glimmers of a breakthrough were evident by late Saturday, as moderate Democrats and Republicans began to rally behind a new short-term funding proposal to reopen the government through early February.

That plan could include funding for storm-ravaged states, reauthorization of the Children's Health Insurance Program - and an implicit agreement to hold votes at some point in the coming weeks on a bipartisan immigration deal, according to senators involved in the discussions.

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., vowed on the Senate floor late Saturday to take up a new spending plan by Monday morning, or sooner, that would keep government open through Feb. 8, but would not contain a solution for "dreamers," undocumented immigrants who were brought into the country as children.

"He wants to keep the government shut down until we finish a negotiation on the subject of illegal immigration," McConnell said of his Democratic counterpart, Senate Minority Leader Charles Schumer, D-N.Y. McConnell then repeated himself: "Shutting down government over illegal immigration."

The moderate senators, meanwhile, are trying to reach a deal on immigration in hopes that, after the three-week spending deal is approved, McConnell would allow it to come up for a vote alongside a longer-term spending plan.

Democrats, however, remained intensely opposed to a short-term spending measure, frustrated by Republicans' refusal to meet their demands on immigration while government is closed. At issue for Democrats is the fate of thousands of young immigrants eligible for protection from deportation under the Obama-era Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program. Trump canceled the program in September, and it is set to expire in March. Lawmakers are scrambling to enact a legislative solution.

Democrats also questioned the ability of the negotiating group to reach an agreement that can pass the Senate and House and also earn Trump's approval.

"The conversation that needs to take place is the conversation at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, where the president of the United States brings in the four leaders from Congress," said Sen. Thomas Carper, D-Del. "We can come up with the best compromise in the world. The key is how to get it through the House and the way to do that is for the president to provide the air cover that he has not so far provided."

Exchanging insults

Lawmakers in both chambers were scheduled to return to work Sunday afternoon.

McConnell and Schumer did little in public Saturday besides trade insults in brief speeches on the Senate floor or on television.

"Do you know what number CR this is? This has been going on for six months," Schumer told CNN, using the legislative term for a short-term spending deal, a continuing resolution. "This is the fourth time. They can't get it done and they just use these CRs."

McConnell hunkered down in his office and played phone tag most of the day with Trump, updating him on where things stood and projecting an air of confidence that he was in a strong position, according to GOP senators.

There were no substantive talks between Schumer and McConnell. The real effort at bridging the divide was a bipartisan collection of roughly 20 senators from the less ideological corners of their respective caucuses. That group met and was trying to advance deal that would open the government for three more weeks and set up a series of votes on competing immigration proposals. However, several Senate Republicans said that McConnell was in no mood to give Schumer any assurances to open up the government.

Protesters rally at 2nd Women's March

NATION'S CAPITAL: Demonstrators share their feelings about President Donald Trump as they stand on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, D.C. Salwan Georges/The Washington Post

WASHINGTON (The Washington Post) - Thousands of demonstrators gathered Saturday on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial and lined the frozen-over Reflecting Pool to rally for women's rights, urge women to run for public office and call on citizens to fully engage on issues from sexual assault and racial equality to immigrant protections and gun violence.

The Women's March on Washington was one of many such protests taking place in hundreds of cities and towns across the nation.

Crowds were upbeat and blinking into the bright, sunny day, with temperatures soaring into the high 50s. Many said they were encouraged by recent Democratic electoral wins in Alabama, where black women were instrumental in electing the state's first Democratic senator since 1992, and in Virginia, where a record number of women won state legislative office.

The rally, which took place hours after the government shutdown that began at midnight, was organized to rekindle the activism and civic participation ignited by the massive Women's March on Washington held the day after President Donald Trump's inauguration last year. Organizers said they hope to build on efforts that have pushed women's issues to the forefront during the politically chaotic year since Trump took office.

That message was delivered repeatedly by a number of speakers, including top Democratic leaders, many of whom remained in Washington because of the shutdown.

House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., led more than a dozen Democratic lawmakers on the stage and told the crowd they had "transformed the world."

"Your truth is never more important than now," she said.

Pelosi pointed out that many more people had turned out for last year's march than had attended Trump's inauguration, and she said the president deserves an F for his first year in office.
